Donaldson was sent to bed last night with the warning that he was to be stripped and lashed with a strap in the morning, for his infringement of some rules of the institution. Donaldson, who is nervous and rather child-sh, brooded over the threat and borrowed a penkulfe from a companion. He spent some time in sharpening the blade, which was about three inches long.

When Davis summoned Donaldson to the bathroom this morning and ordered him to strip, he refused to obey, Davis took hold of him and the boy fought him.

Immeditely after the explosion Supt. If H. L. Fingerhut's big red fox had the physicians with an extra train. The Tribune correspondent went on the train and viewed the scenes of the disaster before darkness set in. The relief corps, carrying lanterns, got ready to descend in hopes of rescuing alive some of the victims.

The blacksmith shop was turned into a dead-house, with four bodies lying there, one disfigured with its head blown off, the others less mangled. Brave men had tried to descend some of the sir and escape slopes without success, and it was not until three hours after the explosion that a voluntar response to the figure of the communication of the status of the surface of the surfac
